Summary

Roger G. Swearingen is a leading authority on the life and works of Robert Louis Stevenson. He is a graduate of the University of California-Berkeley (A.B., 1965) and of Yale University (Ph.D., 1970). From 1969 until 1983 he taught English Literature, Robert Louis Stevenson, and scientific and technical writing at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the University of California-Davis.

At the end of October 2007 he retired from his position as a web site architect and designer at Agilent EEsof EDA (Electronic Design Automation), then part of Agilent Technologies, Inc., in Santa Rosa, California, and since August 2014 part of Keysight Technologies. Hired as a contract technical writer by Hewlett-Packard in January 1984, he worked almost twenty-four years at various information-management tasks for HP and, after it was spun off as a separate company, for Agilent Technologies.
